My own darling Mamma,
Many thanks for the card received yesterday tea-time. I have written since, but I suppose it has not arrived yet. Still waiting & hoping to hear from you soon. I will write to my Uncle, shall not tell him I have been ill, as he would only worry & fuss. I have a doctor, but he is always busy, so I do not see much of him. I am getting on splendidly, & have brought my temperature down to 99 & my pulse to 80. I am getting on splendidly. Lots of love & kisses to Mamma & Dadie & Ethel & Eddie & Edward & Ethel & Eddie & Edward & Ethel & Eddie & Edward

CARTE POSTALE. POSTKARTE.

St. Giles' Church, in Cripplegate, is situated amid a pleasant oasis of green and quiet in the middle of one of London's busiest districts. The present building was erected in the sixteenth century to replace the original structure, destroyed by fire in 1545. In this building Oliver Cromwell was married, and his secretary, Milton, the great poet, was buried. The church contains a bust and stained glass window dedicated to the poet's memory, while a life-size statue has recently been erected close to the east door.
